COSHOCTON, OH – Rolanda Hunt, Education Manager and Debbie McDonald, Marketing/PR Manager at Historic Roscoe Village participated in the Ohio’s Appalachian Country “2010 Spotlight on Ohio’s Appalachian Country...Art, Music and Travel Show” at the Fort Steuben Mall in Steubenville, Ohio April 9 and 10. The show, in its eleventh year, brings travel experts from the 32 Ohio Appalachian Counties under one roof to promote travel and tourism to both the leisure traveler and the group tour market.

This annual travel show highlights the unique travel experiences of Ohio’s Appalachian region. Attendees of the show had the opportunity to “taste, listen and learn” all about Appalachian Ohio through its food, music and arts. Culinary, art and craft demonstrations were ongoing throughout the show accompanied by a background of music provided by area and regional musicians. Weaving demonstrations, by Hunt, took place both days for the many guests visiting the mall. Over 50 exhibitors from the 32 county region were on hand with new ideas for affordable vacations and getaways within a short driving distance.

The OAC was formed in 1992, through the governor’s office, to unite the twenty-nine counties in the Appalachian region of Ohio for the goal of promoting travel and tourism. The organization offers a unified voice for the region in the political arena, opportunities for cooperative marketing efforts, partnering opportunities through networking and promotion of the region as a travel destination through various marketing venues.
